ACKNOWLEDGEMENTS

This report and the thousands of survey forms, photographs, architect and contractor files, and National Register forms which accompany it, could not have been completed without the invaluable assistance of the dozens of dedicated volunteers, student interns, and other interested people who made it possible to conduct a project of this magnitude.

The authors are very grateful to the staff of the Twin Cities Area Urban Corps who cheerfully lined up student interns for the project from the following colleges and universities: Antioch, Carleton, Hamline, Hampshire, Macalester, Notre Dame, Saint Benedict, University of Minnesota, University of Virginia, and Wesleyan . A number of the interns continued to work on the project as volunteers, after work study funds to pay them were exhausted. Staff members of various repositories, architectural firms, historical societies, businesses, and city offices were also very cooperative in answering requests for information, as were many property owners.

The primary staff members involved in the project were Patricia Murphy, Survey Director, Susan W. Granger, Assistant Survey Director, and Gary Phelps, Research Historian. A Survey Steering Committee, composed of representatives of the Ramsey County Historical Society and the St. Paul Heritage Preservation Commission, oversaw the project. The authors are also grateful for the help they received from Virginia Kunz and the rest of the staff of the Ramsey County Historical Society; Judy McLaughlin, Chair of the St. Paul Heritage Preservation Commission; Terry Pfoutz, former city planner for the Commission, and Tom Zahn, his successor; and Dennis Gimmestad and Susan Roth of the Minnesota Historical Society's State Historical Preservation Office, as well as Charles Skrief, formerly of that office. The late Ernest Sandeen provided instrumental guidance in the beginning of the project.

So many talented people participated in the various phases of the survey that it is impossible to acknowledge their individual contributions. We only hope that each will accept our tremendous gratitude and appreciation and we hope that we have not omitted anyone from the list that follows.

It is plain that Building was invented for the Service of Mankind...their first design was to raise a Structure that might defend them and theirs from ill Qualities of the Weather; afterwards they proceeded to make not only every Thing that was necessary to their Safety, but also every Thing that might be convenient or useful to them. At last, instructed and allured by the Opportunities that naturally offer'd themselves, they began to contrive how to make their Buildings subservient to their Pleasures and Recreations....upon considering the various Sorts of Buildings, we should say that some were contrived by Necessity, some by Convenience, and some by Pleasure... all were not erected merely upon those accounts, or for one Occasion more than another, but that this great Variety and Difference among them, are owing principally to the Variety there is among Mankind.

Leone Battista Alberti
Ten Books on Architecture
(De re Aedificatoria), 1485.
